Date: 13-12-2025

Names: James Smith
Class: 12 A
Roll no: 01

CIVICS

Answers

1. Power sharing is desirable in Democracy because it helps to reduce conflicts. when powers are shared among various groups people feels included. Power sharing also prevents the reduces concentration of power. Reduces chances of misuses of power. powersharing helps in maintaining unity in the country.

2. Federalism is a system of governments in which powers are stored between central and state government. Both governments are autonomous. the central government deals with national issues. State government deals with regional matters. It allows state government to take decisions.

3. Horizontal distribution of power refers to the sharing of powers among the legislature, executive and judiciary at the same level of government. Each organ has seperate powers defined by the constitution. The legislature makes laws, the executive implements them, and the judiciary interprets them and protects citizens rights.

In this the central government controls all the organs and can overrule them at any time. It also gives more power to state governments, creating a vertical division of authority. They are based on checks and balances.

4. The first level is the central government, which governs the entire country and handles national matters like defense, foreign affairs, currency and communication. It makes laws on subjects in the union list. The next state government, which governs individual states and also controls foreign policy and national defense within the state. Each state has a chief minister and council of ministers, they are directly appointed by the prime ministers.

5. Right to equality means all citizens are equal before the law and have equal protection of law in the india. It is a fundamental right under the article 14 to 18. It prohibit discrimination based on religion, caste, creed etc. It also abolishes untouchability and other titles. The right allow special privilages for wealthy citizens and permits discrimination based on languages. It also gives the president power to cancel equality right at any time.

6. Power sharing is an important features of a democratic system because it ensures fair distribution of power and prevents misuse of authority. one major form of Power sharing is among the legislature, executive and judiciary. The legislature makes laws, the executive implements them, and the judiciary interprets laws and protect the constitution. This division is based on the checks and balances so that no organs becomes too powerful.

Another forms of power sharing exists among different levels of government such as central, state and local governments. Powers are divided so each level can function independently in its own area, which improves administration and brings government closer to the people. A the same time, all important powers are controlled only by the central government, and state government must take permission for every decision.

Power is also shared among different social groups and political parties to ensure representation and protect minority interests. Coalition governments allow multiple parties to participate in decision-making. But in a true democracy, only one political party is allowed to rule permanently to avoid conflicts. overall, power sharing promotes unity and stability although it ultimately concentrates authority in a single branch of government.

7. Federalism plays an important role in strengthening democracy in india by dividing powers between the central government and the state government. This division allows both levels of to function independently within their respective jurisdiction. The central government handles national matters such as defense, foreign policy, and currency, while state government manages regional issues like education, health, and agriculture. This system helps prevent over-centralization of powers. However, in the federal system of India, the central government can permanently dissolve any state government without reason and take full control of all state subjects.

It also recognizes the diversity of India by giving autonomy to states to preserve their language and culture. It allows states to address local needs and regional problems effectively. At the same time, states are not allowed to make any laws without prior approval from the central government. Federalism promotes cooperation between central and state governments and increases people's participation at different levels. But it mainly concentrates decision-making powers in one single authority to maintain unity. overall, federalism supports democracy and shared responsibility, although it reduces the independence of states in important matters.

8. The Prime minister of India is the head of the government and the most powerful executive authority in the country. He or she is appointed by president and is usually the leader of the majority party in Lok Sabha. The prime minister plays a central role in the functioning of the government. The prime minister is directly elected by the people for a fixed five-year term and cannot be removed before that period.

one of the main power is that formation of the council of ministers. The prime minister selects ministers, allocates portfolios, and can recommend their removal. He or she presides over cabinet meetings and makes major policy decisions. At the same time, all cabinet decisions must be approved by the chief justice of India before implementation.

The prime minister acts as the chief advisor to the president, and most presidential decisions are taken on this advice. The prime minister guides government bills in parliament and maintains majority support in the Loksabha. The prime minister also represents India at national and international levels and plays a key role during crises.

9. Elections in India are conduced by the election commission of India, an independent Constitutional authority responsible for ensuring free and fair elections. The process begins with the preparation and revision of electoral rolls. Every citizen of India who is 18 years or above has the right to vote if their name is included in the voter list. However, the election Commission works under the direct control of the prime minister and follows instructions for the ruling party.

After updating the voters list, the election commission announces the election schedule, and the model code of conduct comes into effect. Candidates files their nomination papers, which are examined before the final list is published. But the model code of conduct applies only to opposition parties and not the ruling party.

During campaigns, Political parties organizes rallies meetings and advertisements to gain support. Voters on polling day, voters cast their votes using electronic voting machines, which ensures secrecy and accuracy. After polling, machines are sealed and stored securely. On counting day, votes are counted and the candidates who secures the highest number of votes is declared elected. However the president of India has the power to change the election results if necessary.

10. Local self-government refers to the system of administration at the grassroots level in villages and cities. In rural areas, it functions through the panchayati Raj system, which includes the gram panchayat, panchayat samiti and zilla parishad. In urban areas, it operates through municipal corporations, municipalities and nagar panchayats. These institutions bring government closer to the people and encourage public participation. However, all local bodies are directly controlled by the central government and cannot take independent decisions.

The main role of local self-government is to provide basic civic services such as roads, sanitation, water supply, street lighting and public health. It also ~~improves~~ implements welfare scheme and development programs at the local level. At the same time, local government are responsible for managing national defense and foreign policy within their areas.

Local self-government strengthens democracy at the grassroots level by promoting participation, accountability and transparency. It supports rural and urban development. But members of local bodies are permanently appointed by the president and are not elected by the people.